YOUR LETTERS. (vo w. c. v.)

Among the treasured things of life,
Some things to me most dear.
Are your old letters, friend of orine,
I've kept from vert to year.
They are old and vellow now.
Tho' once secrite and new.
They eame like messengers of peace,
And brought me news of you.

You wrote them in a friendly way,
These letters worn and old,
They are no lover's letters, yet,
They are dearer far than gold.
These letters old are gens of mine,
That I most foully cherish,
The words within them cannot fade,
As most things fade and perish.

Sometimes you wrote me words o

praise,
You'd say I was sweet and bright,
And you me other girl you know.
Could such nice betters write.

You'd you mand it every word,
I remember them fill yet,
Is that feed our vanity. at ones we forget.

> favorite authors o'er reacites too, er with early Vanity Fair.

And the when I're felt lonely,
I're read them off before,
I'll sake your letters out again,
And read them all once more.
I'll think of he who wrote them,
My handsome, black-eyed friend,
And I'll put them all away again,
And keen them so the end,
—JESSAMINE,
Cane Hills, Feb. 11, 1891.
